year round and only the youths go to the cattle camps in the riverain pastures, which are never more than a few miles from their villages. The Shilluk are not a pastoral people in the sense that the Nuer and Dinka are, and rely to a much greater extent on agricultural products and on fish, for they are skilled and experienced fishermen. Since their migration to their present territory, it is probable that they have never had a very large cattle population, for their riverain pasture is not extensive.[1]

Shilluk clans[2] are not territorial in basis for they are highly segmented and widely distributed throughout the settlements of Shilluk country; as corporate units they have no real significance except at times of national festivals, and then only in the sphere of ritual and ceremony.

The Shilluk are divided into four main classes or groups of clans:

(i) The kwareth: the royal house, who trace descent from Nyikang and from whom the reth of the Shilluk is chosen.

(ii) The orwo: a disinherited branch of the royal house who do not differ from commoners except in the special functions they perform at the installation of the reth, during his lifetime, and at his death. They are a distinct exogamous clan, though they may intermarry with the kwareth despite common ancestry.

(iii) The collo: the name refers collectively to the main body of the Shilluk clans of which a large number trace descent patrilineally from (a) the original followers of Nyikang, (b) individuals of other tribes who have migrated and settled in Shilluk country from early times onwards, and (c) ancestors who are lost in antiquity, but who may have occupied Shilluk country before the arrival of Nyikang.

(iv) The kang reth: the personal attendants of the reth, his wives or wives of past reths; the descendants of royal slaves obtained by capture; those who volunteer to serve him by reason of their possession by the spirit of Nyikang,[3] and paupers who volunteer for this form of service in order to exist at all. Finally, there are the alleged descendants of those who were enslaved because their close kinsmen committed homicide, though this statement must be examined more critically later.

There are no real caste distinctions between kwareth, orwo, collo, and kang reth and, apart from restrictions on the marriages of daughters of a living or past reth, they intermarry freely. The kwareth, however, by reason of their connexion with Nyikang and subsequent reths, are treated with special respect and this extends to those kang reth who have close association with the shrines of Nyikang or of dead kings. The Shilluk basic social structure is very similar to that of the Nuer and Dinka, though there are important differences. The segmentation of the population into territorial units and of the clans into localized lineages has, however, a greater permanency and stability. The distinctive feature of the Shilluk political structure is the existence of an established and theoretically omnipotent monarchy and it is in the political sphere

[1] An extensive census taken during the veterinary campaign against trypanosomiasis gives a figure of 25,000. This was after a very severe epidemic in 1926 and it may be assumed that they had lost at least 50 per cent. of their stock. A human census, accurate at any rate within 15 per cent., gives a population figure of 102,000. The ratio of human population to cattle population is therefore between 1:0·5 and 1:0·25. Cf. Nuer where highest ratio given is 1:1·3 and the lowest 1:1·2.

[2] Kwo: Literally 'descendants of', prefixing the name of the clan. 'Kwo Okelo'—the descendants of Okelo—and so on.
